

problems of the newspaper industry. Working through the Hoe company, he was able to render valuable services to the newspapers of America. While he was not credited with any of the patents used in the manufacture of Hoe presses, he was responsible for many improvements in their design and construction through his suggestions to company engineers. These arose from his experience in the field and the studious attention which he gave to every need of the newspapers as they were presented to him.

Mr. Gallien's important contributions to the progress of his company were recognized by his rapid advancement within the organization. He became sales manager and second vice-president and for the last twenty years of his life, served as vice-president of the company. He had a leading place in all its councils of management and continued his active connection with the company until his death.

Aside from his business, Mr. Gallien's interests centered in his home, his friends, his civic associations and various leisure pursuits. He was a resident of Montclair, New Jersey, for eighteen years prior to his death, and a member there of St. James' Episcopal Church, in Upper Montclair, which he served as vestryman. He gave effective support to numerous community enterprises and was a contributor to many local charities as well as a generous friend to those of the needy whose plight came personally to his attention. In politics he was a staunch Republican. Mr. Gallien was affiliated with the Psi Upsilon Fraternity at Union College, and was a charter member of the Green Brook Country Club, of North Caldwell, New Jersey. He was very fond of outdoor sports and in younger years pursued many of them, enjoying especially the camping trips he was able to undertake in vacation periods. In later years he confined his outdoor recreation chiefly to golf.

On February 10, 1887, in Albany, New York, Addison J. Gallien married Helen Kent Stone, daughter of Jason and Jane (Cheshire) Stone, both born in England. Mr. and Mrs. Gallien became the parents of four children: Grace, who died at the age of seven years; Kenneth; Paul Henry; and Addison Gurnee.

Mr. Gallien died at his home in Upper Montclair, New Jersey, on May 26, 1936, after an illness of some months. Through his business connections he was known all over the country and had a host of friends to whom his death came as a severe personal loss. The organization which he helped to build was deprived of an able and loyal leader and his many associates of a pleasant companion and a counselor of balanced judgment and unflinching wisdom.

PORTER, SIDNEY S., Executive—During his long association with the Calumet Steel Company of Chicago, which began in the early years of the present century, Sidney S. Porter served successively as secretary and vice-president of the corporation and played an important part in its management. He devoted the greater part of his career to the steel industry and for several decades was one of its prominent figures.

Mr. Porter was born in Ottawa, Illinois, on September 18, 1880, a son of Joseph E. and Margaret (Hossack) Porter. His father, who was born in Pennsylvania, came West as a young man and settled in the Illinois town of Ottawa. A gifted inventor, he was the founder of the J. E. Porter Company of Ottawa, formed to exploit his inventions, and afterward became first president of the Inland Steel Company of Chicago. He retained his residence in Ottawa, however, and was one of the first citizens of that community until his death.

Sidney S. Porter was educated in the public schools of Ottawa and left high school to begin his active career at a relatively early age. Until 1899 he was engaged in various occupations, but in the latter year, with his brother, John H. Porter, he joined the executive force of the Buffalo Steel Company at Tonawanda, New York. Sidney S. Porter became secretary of the company and served until 1906. At the end of that time he returned to Chicago and in 1907 was elected secretary of the Calumet Steel Company. He became at once a valued member of the organization and participated in all its councils of management, to which he brought the vision and sound judgment which always distinguished him. He retained the office of secretary until 1922, when he was elected vice-president, and continued in the latter capacity until his retirement in 1935. The value of his services was not only apparent in the operations of his own company but was widely recognized throughout the steel industry generally, in whose ranks he held a prominent place until the close of his active career.

Mr. Porter had many other interests aside from his own business connections, notably in the civic life of Evanston, Illinois, where he made his home. He was alderman of Evanston for two terms, from April, 1927, until the spring of 1931, and both as a public official and as a private citizen, exercised a vigorous and wholesome influence in community affairs. He was a director of the Evanston Community Chest and of the Citizens Budget Committee and was a generous friend of the Evanston Hospital, which he also served as a member of the board of directors. His interest in the work of the hospital was profound and lasting, and the institution shared liberally in his time and effort as well as his means. "Mr. Porter was actively interested
